Thank you for the e-mail. I think I might have looked at this before, having checked on the maps/ streetview and onsite I agree that there is so much hard standing there is very little chance of any root damage occurring.

Many thanks

It's for a new industrial building and there is a line of 12 poplars outside of the site in Kingsland Close to the north which are shown as being retained but the roots of which, according to the Tree Protection drawing, would be within the building's footprint. However, there is an existing area of hardstanding in place so there may not be much impact.
