I think the planning for this should be declined for several reasons:

1. If planning permission has not been granted for this type of conversion in this area previously, you will be setting a precedent and it will be harder to refuse in the future.

2. Most of the properties in this area have shared drives and I personally would not be happy with limited access i.e. washing my car outside the garage, and the excess water flowing into someone's living accommodation, not being able to park with the consent of my neighbour because the may feel differently if it is someone's home rather than a garage.

3. I would feel that is would limit the way that we use our garden, we would have think more carefully as it would be nearer to someone's home.

4. It would also invade on the privacy of all surrounding properties. Particularly if you are the poor person who lives next door to the proposed extension

The property in question does not personally effect me but I can see that in the future it may cause more people to request this extension to their property, once a precedent has been set.
